1 Throughout their Response to Order to Show Cause for Preliminary 2 Injunction and Opposition to Preliminary Injunction, ECF #20 (“Opp.”), 3 Defendants claim that Section 26806 “will assist law enforcement . . . efforts to 4 investigate, deter, [] prosecute[,] . . . combat[] . . . [and] solv[e] . . . gun crimes,” 5 including “curb[ing]” crime and “provid[ing] key evidence in prosecuting” 6 violators, and thus solving “unique problems [faced by] law enforcement” bringing 7 charges that “require evidence. . . .” Opp. 1, 20, 21, 22. On that basis, Defendants 8 ask this Court to dispense with numerous constitutional protections to make it 9 easier for California to enforce the law. But while this approach might sound 10 appealing to state regulators who hold a dim view of constitutional rights, the Sixth 11 Circuit has explained that “many (if not most) [constitutional] violations would 12 benefit the police in some way: It could be safer for police without a warrant to kick 13 in the door in the middle of the night rather than ring the doorbell during the day, 14 and peering through everyone’s windows might be a more effective way to find out 15 who is cooking methamphetamine (or engaging in any illegal behavior, for that 16 matter). But the Bill of Rights exists to protect people from the power of the 17 government, not to aid the government.” Morgan v. Fairfield County, 903 F.3d 18 553, 563 (6th Cir. 2018). Additionally, the crime-fighting utopia envisioned by 19 Defendants cannot be met under Section 26806 because as Defendants noted in 20 their opposition, “the law forbids dealers from using, sharing, allowing access to, or 21 otherwise releasing the recordings” except by “search warrant or court order,” of 22 which neither of these exceptions are used to track and locate criminals and bring 23 them to prosecution. The very basis of this law is a false premise. Opp 1-2. This 24 Court should enter a preliminary injunction against Section 26806 in order to 25 enforce the constitutional rights at issue here, and “protect people from the power 26 of [California] government.” Id.

I. PLAINTIFFS ARE LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON THE MERITS

A. SECTION 26806 VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT

1. Section 26806 has a clear chilling effect on protected speech and association.

This case is not about stopping crime. If it were, all retail stores would face the same onerous requirements. This case is about the government acting in an overbearing manner to capture as much private conversation as possible with no limitations and no real government interest that can be accomplished through Section 26806. Claiming that Section 26806’s placement of Orwellian telescreens into businesses and homes has no chilling effect upon gun owners in California, Defendants make the head-scratching claim that “nothing about [Section 26806] proscribes, regulates, or punishes any sort of speech or association or says anything about the content of the recordings themselves.” Opp. 4. And because Section 26806 does not “proscribe or even regulate speech,”¹ Defendants argue, “Plaintiffs’ allegations that section 26806 chills their First Amendment rights are not objectively reasonable. . . .” Id. But that is precisely what it means for a law to have a chilling effect – it causes people to alter their lawful behavior without the need for direct government action. Section 26806 does not simply “listed to one’s speech in order to obtain a firearm,” it goes far beyond that. Opp. 5:16-17. What can Defendants possibly gain by recording families in their pajamas?

Professor Frederick Schauer has explained that “a chilling effect occurs when individuals seeking to engage in activity protected by the First Amendment are deterred from so doing by governmental regulation not specifically directed at that protected activity.” F. Schauer, Fear, Risk and the First Amendment: Unraveling ¹ The cases Defendants cite in support of this claim have nothing to do with the issue here. Practicing by headnote, Defendants first cite Legi-Tech, Inc. v. Keiper, 601 F. Supp. 371, 379 (N.D.N.Y. 1984), which dealt with an “overbreadth” challenge to “plaintiff’s exclusion from access” to a “public . . . news service” (id. at 372) – not any alleged chilling effect on protected speech or association. Next, the Ninth Circuit’s reference in Interpipe Contracting, Inc. v. Becerra, 898 F.3d 879, 896 (2018), to a law that “does not regulate conduct” had to do with an inquiry whether it was a “an impermissible conduct-based regulation” – not whether it had a chilling effect on speech.

1 the Chilling Effect, 58 B.U. L. Rev. 685, 693 (1978). See also Speiser v. Randall, 2 357 U.S. 513, 529 (1958) (striking down loyalty oaths “which must inevitably 3 result in suppressing protected speech”); NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 4 U.S. 449, 460 (1958) (refusing to require the production of membership lists, even 5 though publicization of such lists did not directly “proscribe[], regulate[], or 6 punish[]” membership in the organization); Nordyke v. Santa Clara Cnty., 110 7 F.3d707 (9th Cir. 1997) (the Ninth Circuit has held that “[a]n offer to sell firearms 8 or ammunition in speech that ‘does no more than propose a commercial 9 transaction.’ Such an offer is, therefore, commercial speech within the meaning of 10 the First Amendment.

11 Defendants also claim there can be no chilling effect caused by Section 12 26806 because “the law tightly limits the use or release of the recordings. . . .”² 13 Opp. 5. But what Defendants call “extremely limited circumstances” in reality are 14 anytime the government wants any recording for any reason. Indeed, Section 15 26806 broadly demands that a dealer “shall allow access to the system to an agent 16 of the department or a licensing authority conducting an inspection of the licensee’s 17 premises, for the purpose of inspecting the system for compliance with this section.
 18 . . .” Section 26806(b)(2). There is nothing in “access to the system” that would 19 prevent a California official from, for example, making a copy of the recordings 20 contained in the system in order to verify “compliance.” And, regulating only the 21 licensee, Section 26806 does nothing to control use of such recordings once they 22 fall into California’s hands.³ Cf. Opp. 5 (promising that “the government plainly is

23
 24 ² Focusing on “release” of Section 26806 recordings, Defendants omit any 25 discussion of the fact that creation of such recordings is ongoing and pervasive, occurring in multiple places (not only in gun stores but also in private homes), 24-hours a day.

26 ³ Note that just last summer, California DOJ had a major breach of gun 27 owner private information that was leaked publicly in violation of the law. Fear of 28 information getting into the wrong hands when handled by the State is a very real fear for gun owners in California. <https://oag.ca.gov/news/press-releases/california-department-justice-alerts-individuals-impacted-exposure-personal> (last visited Jan.
 10, 2024).

not listening to transactions”). Defendants apparently miss the hollowness of their assurance that only the government (the violator) will have access to recordings made in violation of numerous constitutional rights. Interestingly enough, the only party restricted by Section 26806 from accessing and using the recordings is the gun dealer (the one whose rights are being violated). Id. at subsection (b) (“A licensee shall not use”); (b)(1) (“A licensee shall allow access”).

Finally, Defendants opine that no chilling effect can occur here because “a similar law in Illinois has been in effect since 2021.” Opp. 5. Defendants fault Plaintiffs for failing to provide “evidence” of the chilling effect of a different law recently enacted in another state as if that were necessary to prevail here. In any event, the Illinois statute Defendants reference, 430 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 68/5-50, involves only “video surveillance of critical areas,” only takes place in retail facilities, and requires signage stating only that “YOUR IMAGE MAY BE RECORDED,” none of which involve the same chilling effect on spoken words or in private, confidential conversations at issue here.

2. Section 26806 violates the right to speak anonymously.

Citing no authority, Defendants claim that the right to speak anonymously only applies to written speech that is “published pseudonymously or anonymously, untethered from the individual’s face and voice.” Opp. 6. Defendants fault Plaintiffs for failing to provide any cases explicitly finding that First Amendment anonymity applies to spoken words. But although Defendants are eager to cast stones (see Matthew 7:3-5), neither do they provide a citation to any authority finding that anonymity does not apply to an individual who speaks in places “open to the public.” Indeed, it is doubtful that any such authorities exist.

Quite to the contrary, numerous cases confirm that the right to anonymity applies to all forms of speech. See, e.g., Buckley v. Am. Const. L. Found., 525 U.S. 182, 199 (1999) (striking down requirement that petition circulators wear name badges because “[t]he injury to speech is heightened ... because the badge

1 requirement compels personal name identification at the precise moment when the 2 circulator's interest in anonymity is greatest."). As one district court explained, 3 striking down a mask mandate, "there can be no doubt that ... prohibiting the ...
 4 concealing identity in public, burdens the free speech and association rights," 5 including the "rights to anonymous speech and association." Am. KKK v. City of 6 Goshen, 50 F. Supp. 2d 835, 838, 840 (N.D. Ind. May 4, 1999) (collecting similar 7 cases). These and a legion of other cases soundly reject Defendants' unsupported 8 claim that "there is nothing pseudonymous or anonymous about appearing in 9 public. . . ." Opp. 6.⁴ There is also a distinction here between the process of filling 10 out paperwork to complete the firearm transaction and having every breath you or 11 anyone else breathes caught on recording. Defendants seem to think that since you 12 are submitting your name to purchase a firearm, then you should be open to all the 13 surveillance they choose to use against gun owners. Opp. 6.

14 3. Section 26806 constitutes odious viewpoint discrimination.

15 Claiming that Section 26806 does not impose viewpoint discrimination 16 against supporters of the Second Amendment, Defendants claim that the law 17 "uniformly requires businesses in a particular, highly regulated industry to take 18 specific security measures." Opp. 6. In other words, Section 26806 is broad, in 19 that it is specific. As journalist M. Stanton Evans once said, "he who writes the 20 resolved clause wins the debate."⁵ Indeed, by singling out a "particular" type of 21 business and imposing an Orwellian monitoring requirement on it alone, Section 22 26806 bears out California's clear animus against gun owners. Defendants do not 23 ⁴ Defendants also make much ado of the fact that some of those who frequent 24 gun stores end up purchasing firearms, the acquisition of which requires 25 identification. Opp. 6. Of course, not everyone who visits a gun store buys a 26 firearm (as opposed to accessories, gunsmithing services, or merely to "shoot the 27 breeze" – including complaints about government officials – without making any 28 purchase at all). See Compl. ¶¶ 120-24. But more importantly, Section 26806 compels gun dealers to create a permanent audio/video record which preserves not only the identity of the speaker but also the content of his speech (which otherwise would remain private between him and others within the store).

⁵ See also Opp. 10 ("Defined at the proper level of specificity, then. . . .").

1 point out any similar requirements posed on other purportedly “highly regulated 2 industries” – especially not within the private homes of those in such industry. Not 3 to mention, this allegedly “highly regulated industry” is constitutionally protected.
 4 Liquor producers,⁶ mines,⁷ and junkyards⁸ are not.

5 Defendants argue that “Section 26806 does not require anyone to disclose 6 their protected group affiliation, beyond what is inherently disclosed by appearing 7 in public. . . .” Opp. 7. That is like claiming that requiring video cameras be 8 installed in all NAACP meetings “does not require anyone to disclose their 9 protected group affiliation, beyond what is inherently disclosed by appearing” at a 10 meeting of NAACP members. But see NAACP, 357 U.S. at 460. Elsewhere, 11 Defendants claim that visiting a gun store constitutes “appear[ing] . . . in a public 12 place.” Opp. 7. Unsurprisingly, Defendants offer no authority for their claim that 13 private businesses are akin to sidewalks, parks, or town squares. Nor do 14 Defendants attempt to explain how a home-based dealer who operates by 15 appointment only has somehow opened his private home to the public. At the 16 minimum, Section 26806 violates multiple constitutional rights, impermissibly 17 discriminating against gun dealers because they transact business in constitutionally 18 protected “arms” that are politically unpopular in California.

19 4. Section 26806 compels speech.

20 Claiming that Section 26806 does not compel speech, Defendants opine that 21 it merely requires transmission of “purely factual and uncontroversial information.
 22 . . .” Opp. 7 (citing Zauderer v. Off. of Disciplinary Couns. of Sup. Ct. of Ohio, 23 471 U.S. 626, 651 (1985)).⁹ Unsurprisingly, Defendants do not attempt to wrestle 24 with Nat’l Inst. of Fam. & Life Advocs. v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361 (2018), the 25 Supreme Court’s most recent word on the subject. There, the Court rejected the 26

27 ⁶ Colonnade Catering Corp. v. United States, 397 U.S. 72 (1970).

28 ⁷ Donovan v. Dewey, 452 U.S. 594 (1981).

⁸ New York v. Burger, 482 U.S. 691 (1987).

⁹ The Ninth Circuit case Defendants cite relies entirely on Zauderer.

1 notion that California could require pro-life clinics to inform patients that California 2 will fund their abortions, opining that Zauderer does not have any application to 3 “disclos[ing] information about state-sponsored services—including abortion, 4 anything but an ‘uncontroversial’ topic.” Id. at 2372. Likewise, here, California 5 requires gun dealers to post signage informing their customers that “state-6 sponsored” audiovisual surveillance is in progress – monitoring all who engage in 7 Second Amendment commerce. Certainly, the ongoing violation of numerous 8 constitutional rights by California through an Orwellian telescreen is “anything but 9 an ‘uncontroversial’ topic.” Defendants fail to address Judge Suddaby’s finding in 10 Antonyuk v. Hochul, 639 F. Supp. 3d 232, 344 (N.D.N.Y. 2022), explaining that a 11 New York law requiring property owners post signage allowing gun owners onto 12 their property is “coerc[ive]” and “controversial.” Id. at 345.

13 B. SECTION 26806 VIOLATES THE SECOND AMENDMENT

14 2. SECTION 26806 IMPLICATES THE SECOND AMENDMENT’S 15 TEXT.

16 a. Defendants invite the Court to elevate dicta over express 17 holdings.

18 Claiming that the Second Amendment is not even implicated, Defendants 19 argue that Section 26806 is nothing more than a “‘law[] imposing conditions and 20 qualifications on the commercial sale of arms,’” and thus is “‘presumptively 21 lawful.’” Opp. 8 (citing Heller at 626-27).¹⁰ Defendants’ argument contains at 22 ¹⁰ Defendants make a number of flagrant misrepresentations about the 23 Supreme Court’s statements. First, they cite Bruen for the proposition that “the 24 Second Amendment is not a ‘regulatory straightjacket’” (Opp. 8), but conveniently 25 omit that neither is it “a regulatory blank check.” Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2133.

 26 Second, Defendants claim the Second Amendment allows an amorphous “‘variety’ 27 of gun regulations” (Opp. 8), but quote Justice Kavanaugh’s concurrency, which is 28 not the law. Third, in spite of the Court’s repeated refusals to interest-balance, Defendants’ claim that the Second Amendment “does not prevent states from . . .
 ‘experiment[ing] with reasonable firearms regulations’ to address threats to the public.” Opp. 8. But this utterly misrepresents McDonald v. City of Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 785 (2010), which only rebutted claims that incorporation of the Second Amendment would have violated “principles of federalism” and eliminated state gun laws by “stifl[ing] experimentation.” Id. at 783. The Court’s observation that the passage of laws will continue was no crystal-ball endorsement of their constitutionality.

1 least two errors.

2 First, Defendants seem to believe that any restriction they unilaterally slap 3 with the label “condition[] [or] qualification[] on the commercial sale of arms” 4 thereby becomes one. But not every law that tangentially involves the transfer of a 5 firearm is a “condition[] [or] qualification[] on the commercial sale of arms.”
6 Otherwise, all manner of clearly unconstitutional requirements would be found 7 automatically constitutional. See Compl. ¶¶ 202-07. Instead, “[o]f course, not 8 every regulation on the commercial sale of arms is presumptively lawful.” Rigby v.
9 Jennings, 630 F. Supp. 3d 602, 613 (D. Del. 2022).¹¹ Without any further 10 exposition as to which sorts of laws the Supreme Court presumed would have 11 historical support when challenged, no court can label a given restriction 12 definitively “commercial” in nature and thus definitively exempt it from 13 the Bruen framework.

14 Second, Defendants confuse “presumptively lawful” with conclusively 15 lawful. But Heller’s passing references (in dicta) to assumed historical traditions 16 that the Court expected would be uncovered in future challenges have no bearing on 17 Bruen’s test, which must be applied each time the Second Amendment’s plain text 18 covers a challenger’s conduct. Indeed, Bruen explicitly instructs that its historical 19 analysis is required in every case, stating that its methodology is the “only” way for 20 a court to conclude a restriction to be constitutional. 142 S. Ct. at 2126; see also 21 Heller, 554 U.S. at 626 (“we do not undertake an exhaustive historical analysis 22 today”); id. at 635 (“there will be time enough to expound upon the historical 23 justifications ... if and when those exceptions come before us.”). Defendants offer 24 no explanation why dicta should be elevated above the Court’s express holdings 25

26 ¹¹ For example, striking down 18 U.S.C. § 922(k)’s ban on obliterating a 27 firearm’s serial number, a federal district court flatly rejected the government’s 28 contention that the law was constitutional without historical analysis based on the government’s characterization of it as a commercial regulation. United States v.
Price, 635 F. Supp. 3d 455, 459 (S.D. W. Va. 2022).

1 demanding a historical analysis.¹²

2 b. The “Right to Keep and Bear Arms” clearly includes 3 acquisition.

4 Next, Defendants claim that “Plaintiffs do not even attempt to demonstrate¹³ 5 that the law actually regulates or infringes upon individuals’ ability to ‘keep and 6 bear Arms.’” Opp. 9. But Section 26806 clearly “regulates” (id.) the acquisition of 7 arms, a natural prerequisite to keeping them. Confusingly, Defendants at first 8 appear to concede that the Second Amendment protects not only “possession or use 9 of arms,” but also “related conduct.” Id. (emphasis added). Indeed, courts almost 10 categorically affirm that the Second Amendment protects numerous rights ancillary 11 to keeping and bearing – most especially, acquisition. See Compl. ¶¶ 192-94 12 (compiling cases on the issue). This Court is no exception. See Boland v. Bonta, 13 2023 WL 2588565, at *5 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 20, 2023) (“The Second Amendment also 14 protects attendant rights that make the underlying right to keep and bear arms 15 meaningful.”); see also B&L Prods., Inc. v. Newsom, 2023 WL 7132054, at *13 16 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 30, 2023) (same). Yet Defendants also posit that the Second 17 Amendment’s protections do not “include the commercial sale of firearms” because 18 the text only references the ability to “‘have’ and ‘carry’ weapons.” Opp. 9; see 19 also id. at 11 (“the sale of arms ... does not implicate the Second Amendment’s

20 21 ¹² Indeed, once tested, a number of Heller’s previously assumed historical 22 traditions already have been shown to be erroneous. See, e.g., Range v. Att’y Gen., 23 69 F.4th 96 (3d Cir. 2023) (successful as-applied challenge to 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) 24 (felons)); Tyler v. Hillsdale Cnty. Sheriff’s Dep’t, 837 F.3d 678, 688 (6th Cir. 2016) (allowing a challenge to 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(4) (mentally ill) to proceed). If use of Supreme Court dicta in lieu of the Bruen framework was appropriate, none of these successful challenges would have cleared the starting gate.

25 ¹³ Defendants conveniently overlook the numerous ways Plaintiffs have 26 demonstrated how Section 26806 infringes their Second Amendment rights. For 27 example, Section 26806 forces Plaintiff Richards to “stop being an FFL” – a 28 constitutionally protected profession – “or risk exposing his clients and family to privacy violations because of the constant recording” within his own home. Compl.
 ¶ 23; see also id. ¶¶ 212, 464 (“Section 26806 chills a lawful person’s desire to exercise their constitutional right to bear arms out of fear of being constantly observed and recorded by an administration hostile towards gun ownership. . . .”).

1 text”); id. (“caus[ing] some licensed firearms dealers to go out of business ... does 2 not implicate the Second Amendment’s text.”).

3 But if there is no right to acquire arms, and no right to sell them, Defendants 4 betray the discredited belief that there is no individual right to keep or bear arms at 5 all. Indeed, with no right to buy or sell, Defendants could ban all firearms 6 commerce, with the only remaining option to manufacture them oneself. Yet in 7 other litigation before this Court, Defendant Bonta has claimed that there is no right 8 to manufacture firearms, either. See Defendants’ Opposition to Motion for 9 Preliminary Injunction at 14-15, Def. Distributed v. Bonta, No. 2:22-cv-06200-GW-10 AGR (C.D. Cal. Oct. 3, 2022) (“There is simply no textual support or authority ...
11 that ... the Second Amendment [] includes the right to ‘manufacture’ or ‘assemble’ 12 a firearm, let alone the right to own any machine or machine part that could 13 conceivably be used to manufacture a firearm.”). In Defendants’ world, then, there 14 is no right to acquire a firearm at all, thus nullifying the Second Amendment’s 15 guarantees entirely. “What a marvelous, Second Amendment loophole!” United 16 States v. Hicks, 649 F. Supp. 3d 357, 359-60 (W.D. Tex. 2023).¹⁴

17 Clearly regulating the protected right to acquire arms, Section 26806 imposes 18 a surveillance requirement on all commercial firearm sales, sales that now cannot 19 occur without surveillance. It seems unlikely that Defendants would defend a law 20 that similarly conditioned the right to post a Tweet on first allowing the government 21 access to a phone’s camera to take a picture of the poster. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 22 2156 (Second Amendment “is not ‘a second-class right, subject to an entirely 23 different body of rules than the other Bill of Rights guarantees.”).

24
25 ¹⁴ Of course, Defendants’ theory is patently false. Constitutional rights 26 “implicitly protect those closely related acts necessary to their exercise,” Luis v 27 United States, 578 U.S. 5, 26 (2016) (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment), and 28 Defendants’ own cited authority (Opp. 10-11) stands for the proposition that “the core Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms for self-defense ‘wouldn’t mean much’ without the ability to acquire arms.” Teixeira v. County of Alameda, 873 F.3d 670, 677 (9th Cir. 2017); see also Compl. ¶ 197 n.21.

c. Defendants urge prohibited interest balancing.

In a final attempt to shirk their burden to demonstrate a robust historical tradition supporting Section 26806, Defendants seek to revert to the prohibited “two-step inquiry” used by the courts of appeal prior to Bruen. Specifically, Defendants urge that only regulations that completely “prohibit[]” or “prevent” exercise of Second Amendment rights constitute “infringe[ments].” Opp. 10 (disputing that a law which merely “interferes with” or “has any tangential effect” on Second Amendment rights can be subject to Bruen’s analysis); see also id. at 11-12 (“meaningfully constrain[]” and “overly burden[]”); Young v. Hawaii, 896 F.3d 1044, 1068 (9th Cir. 2018) (explaining, prior to Bruen, that only laws that “destroy” rights are unconstitutional without application of scrutiny). On the contrary, Heller and Bruen “expressly rejected the application of any ‘judge-empowering “interest-balancing inquiry”’” which examined whether a law significantly “burdened” a “core Second Amendment right.” Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126, 2129.

Defendants claim that this Court cannot reach Bruen’s historical framework because there is a “sparse evidentiary record” that is “devoid of evidence” as to the numerical effects on firearms commerce. Opp. 11-12. If anything, Defendants’ objection goes more to the irreparable harm analysis than whether Bruen’s historical framework is implicated. The Supreme Court certainly has never said that a plaintiff must show a “meaningful” (Opp. 12) infringement of his rights before the government is required to justify its regulation by reference to the historical tradition. Such a holding would put the cart before the horse, and it would invite prohibited interest balancing.

Citing no authority, Defendants posit that there is a “proper level of specificity” at which to analyze the Second Amendment’s text – one that just so happens to skew in Defendants’ favor. Opp. 10. Bruen puts it far more plainly: when the Second Amendment’s plain text “covers an individual’s conduct,” the government must bear its historical burden. 142 S. Ct. at 2129-30. A law requiring

1 mass surveillance of firearm sales or else they cannot happen clearly “covers” 2 one’s right to acquire (to “keep”) “arms.” Because Plaintiffs belong to “the people”
 3 and the firearms they seek to purchase from California’s dealers constitute “arms,” 4 the textual inquiry ends here, and the burden shifts to Defendants. Compl. ¶ 194.

5 d. Defendants advance the shocking claim that exercise of 6 Second Amendment rights is a public affair.

7 Misunderstanding Plaintiffs’ argument, which focused on the fact that 8 exercise of one constitutional right cannot be conditioned on forfeiture of another 9 (Compl. ¶¶ 194, 426-46), Defendants offer the truly shocking claim that Section 10 26806 (which requires audio/video recording of all gun sales) does not infringe 11 Second Amendment rights because “someone’s status as a firearm purchaser has 12 long been subject to public disclosure.” Opp. 12 (citing Silveira v. Lockyer, 312 13 F.3d 1052 (9th Cir. 2002). But the case on which Defendants rely involved an 14 “informational privacy rights” challenge (id. at 1092), not the Second Amendment.
 15 In fact, the Second Amendment claims were dismissed in that case based on the 16 Ninth Circuit’s obviously wrong holding that “the Second Amendment affords only 17 a collective right to own or possess guns or other firearms. . . .” Id. (emphasis 18 added). Defendants’ use of this expressly repudiated holding to support its claim 19 that California may, without implicating constitutional rights, publicize the names, 20 addresses, makes, models, and serial numbers of all California gun owners, 21 should itself provide any further needed justification to strike down Section 22 26806’s tyrannical regime.

23 2. Defendants Utterly Fail to Bear Their Historical Burden.

24 Defendants insist on watering down Bruen’s methodology in a case that 25 presents no “unprecedented societal concerns or dramatic technological changes.”
 26 Bruen at 2132; see Opp. 13-14. Claiming audiovisual surveillance itself is a 27 “dramatic technological change” warranting a loosening in analogical stringency, 28 Defendants invert Bruen’s language to circularly suggest that a high-tech form of 1 infringement is its own justification for a more permissive standard to justify that 2 infringement. Opp. 14. In other words, Defendant’s argument is this: if only the 3 Founders could have seen how pervasively we can violate rights in the 21st Century, 4 surely they would have approved. On the contrary, Bruen’s discussion of “dramatic 5 technological changes” was in the context of novel “regulatory challenges posed by 6 firearms today.” Bruen at 2132 (emphasis added). If anything, the more pervasive 7 and dystopian a modern infringement is, the more protective the Bill of Rights must 8 be.¹⁵ See, e.g., United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400 (2012) (GPS tracking); Kyllo v.

 9 United States, 533 U.S. 27 (2001) (thermal imagers). This is no “absurd argument.” 10 Opp. 14.

11 Defendants’ oft-repeated platitudes of ‘public safety’ and ‘preventing crime’ 12 have been concerns since the Founding. Accordingly, Defendants cannot meet their 13 burden with merely “relevantly similar” analogues. Bruen at 2132. Instead, the 14 historical inquiry is “fairly straightforward” and, despite their vociferous objections 15 (Opp. at 14), Defendants must proffer “distinctly similar” historical evidence that 16 addressed the same societal issues the same way as today – for example, historical 17 laws requiring Founding-era gunsmiths to record the appearances and conversations 18 of patrons. Id. at 2131; Compl. ¶¶ 214, 216. Defendants fail to evince such a 19 tradition, as none ever existed.

20 Although Defendants’ lesser, purportedly “relevantly similar” analogues will 21 not suffice to uphold Section 26806, Plaintiffs emphasize several analogical errors.
 22 First, Defendants cite two cases and one law review article for the proposition that 23 historical regulations on commercial sales were “widespread.” Opp. 14. But 24 Defendants fail to identify specific examples, and “we are not obliged to sift the 25 historical materials for evidence to sustain [Defendants’] statute. That is 26

 27 ¹⁵ See Minn. Star & Trib. Co. v. Minn. Comm’r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575, 583 28 n.6 (1983) (observing that “when we do have evidence that a particular law would have offended the Framers, we have not hesitated to invalidate it on that ground alone”).

1 [Defendants’] burden.” Bruen at 2150. In any case, United States v. Serrano, 651 2 F. Supp. 3d 1192, 1211-12 (S.D. Cal. 2023), and United States v. Holton, 639 F.
 3 Supp. 3d 704, 711-12 (N.D. Tex. 2022), each cite Teixeira, 873 F.3d at 685, and 4 Robert J. Spitzer, Gun Law History in the United States and Second Amendment
 5 Rights, 80 L. & Contemp. Probs. 55, 76 (2017).¹⁶

6 The historical laws cited in Teixeira (at 685) bear no resemblance to Section 7 26806 and fail both Bruen’s “how” and “why” metrics (i.e., mechanisms and 8 motivations) because these laws imposed restrictions on firearm sales to Indians 9 outside the colonies – in effect, restrictions on sales to foreigners and potential 10 belligerents at the time (today’s foreign nationals, see 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(5)), not 11 members of “the people.” See id. None imposed anything close to Section 26806’s 12 mass-surveillance requirements on those within the community of “the people.”

13 As for Spitzer, the cited page refers only to (i) a 1652 “New York” law 14 (actually, a Dutch colonial law in New Netherland, unrelated to American tradition, 15 Spitzer, supra, at 76 n.142), (ii) a 1631 Virginia law (an early census untethered 16 from surveilling firearm commerce)¹⁷, and (iii) a 1651 Virginia law (which were 17 “Articles at the Surrender of the Countrie of Virginia” following conflict between 18 colonial and English governments,¹⁸ Spitzer, supra, at 76 and n.144). Spitzer then 19 references taxation laws from the analytically irrelevant 1860s (Spitzer, supra, at 20 76). See Bruen at 2137 (“19th-century evidence was ‘treated [only] as mere 21 confirmation. . . .’”). These laws either predate or postdate the Founding anywhere 22 from many decades to a century and thus “shed[] little light on how to properly 23 interpret the Second Amendment.” Id. at 2144. Moreover, none of these laws 24 employed comparable mechanisms (mass surveillance of people and transactions) 25 or motivations (discouraging or otherwise recording sales to prohibited persons)

26
 27 ¹⁶ Spitzer’s late-19th-century firearm taxes and early gunpowder-storage laws that are inapposite for the reasons discussed below.

28 ¹⁷ <http://tinyurl.com/2k7vd77r> (“Act LVI”).

¹⁸ <http://tinyurl.com/yrptv8mu>.

1 under Bruen’s “how” and “why.”

2 Second, Defendants cite gunpowder storage and firearm inspection laws via 3 references to a book by William J. Novak without providing any primary sources – 4 let alone dates to confirm these laws’ analytical relevancy. See Opp. 15 5 (referencing “similar legal schemes,” a “series of statutes,” and “other laws”). But 6 see Bruen at 2150 (warning Defendants about failing to “sift” the record).
 7 Defendants then string-cite some 19th-century state laws and city ordinances to the 8 same effect. Opp. 15, 16. But see Bruen at 2137 (“19th-century evidence was 9 ‘treated as mere confirmation. . . .’”). In addition to their temporal irrelevance, 10 these laws bear no resemblance to Section 26806 and fail Bruen’s analogical 11 metrics.

12 Gunpowder laws were products of their time, when rudimentary gunpowder 13 was volatile and hazardous, with poor storage conditions and careless handling 14 risking widespread explosive and fire damage to entire towns.¹⁹ In contrast, 15 modern smokeless powder used in today’s ammunition has exponentially greater 16 stability and is exempt from explosive storage requirements.

17 See 18 U.S.C. § 845(a)(4). These historical fire-prevention laws did not 18 surveil gun owners, place the “eyes” and “ears” of government inside homes and 19 businesses, or seek to prevent crime.

20 Similarly, firearm inspection laws (Opp. 15, 16) were not surveillance 21 measures aimed at crime prevention, but rather quality-control laws to ensure 22 firearms would be effective and not explode in users’ hands.²⁰ Moreover, as 23 Defendants’ Granata cite admits, a distinct feature of these inspection laws was a be introduced into use which are unsafe and thereby the lives of the Citizens be exposed”).

1 nominal fine for noncompliance.²¹ Section 26806 quite differently subjects 2 noncompliant dealers to license forfeiture, closure of businesses, and loss of 3 livelihoods. Cal. Penal Code § 26800(a); see also Heller at 633-34 (comparing 4 historical penalties to modern consequences is a valid consideration).

5 Third, Defendants proffer just three laws ranging from 1881 to 1911 6 imposing recordkeeping requirements on gun dealers. Opp. 16. Despite coming far 7 too late (unless to confirm the same tradition at the Founding), these three laws 8 hardly evince a national tradition. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2153, 2156 (dispensing with 9 “outliers”). Finally, Defendants’ citation to the National and Federal Firearms Acts 10 is inapposite. Bruen at 2154 n.28 (refusing to address “20th-century evidence 11 [which] does not provide insight into the meaning of the Second Amendment.”).

12 At bottom, Defendants’ purported “analogues” are too few, too late, and too 13 irrelevant to establish an early American tradition of perpetual and pervasive 14 surveillance of firearm commerce. Section 26806 violates the Second Amendment.
 15 Indeed, the closest analogue to Section 26806 is from 1949 – the government of 16 Oceania, with its ubiquitous posters entitled “Big Brother is watching you,” with 17 eyes that seemed to follow the viewer wherever he or she moved. See George 18 Orwell, Nineteen Eighty-Four, Penguin Classics ed. (London: Secker and Warburg, 19 1949).

20 3. Section 26806 Violates the Fourth Amendment.

21 Defendants claim that Section 26806 does not violate Fourth Amendment 22 rights, first because there is a “diminished expectation of privacy” for “operators 23 of closely regulated industries.” Opp. 17. Citing a Ninth Circuit case, Defendants 24 broadly assert that, apparently without exception, any search of “commercial 25 property used in [a] ‘closely regulated’ industr[y] [is] constitutionally permissible.” 26 Id. (citation omitted). In other words, Defendants seem to interpret “diminished 27 expectation of privacy” as “extinguished expectation of privacy.” The Ninth 28 ²¹ <http://tinyurl.com/yz8syyda> at 40, Add. 35 (imposing a fine of $10).

1 Circuit says no such thing. Rather, administrative searches of highly regulated 2 industries are permissible, at most, if performed “to further a regulatory scheme.”
 3 Kilgore v. City of South El Monte, 3 F.4th 1186, 1192 (9th Cir. 2021) (“to ensure 4 compliance with the ... Act”); Verdun v. City of San Diego, 51 F.4th 1033, 1039 5 (9th Cir. 2022) (“for purposes of checking compliance with federal laws”). Quite 6 the opposite, when “the ‘primary object’ of the search is to ‘gather evidence of 7 criminal activity,’” a “criminal warrant supported by probable cause[] is required. .
 8 . .” United States v. Grey, 959 F.3d 1166, 1178 (9th Cir. 2020); see also Burger, 9 482 U.S. at 693 (distinguishing between “searches undertaken solely to uncover 10 evidence of criminality and [those] to enforce a comprehensive regulatory 11 scheme”).

12 On this point, Defendants’ own briefing undermines their Fourth Amendment 13 defense, as they repeatedly insist that Section 26806 is a crime-prevention measure 14 designed to “assist law enforcement in combatting ... gun crimes,” specifically in 15 “provid[ing] key evidence” of criminal activity. Opp. 1, 2; see also id. at 20 16 (“preventing gun theft and crime justify any intrusion,” and Section 26806 17 “assist[s] in ‘related enforcement efforts’”); id. at 21 (using Section 26806 to 18 provide “evidence” to prosecute straw purchasers). None of these stated objectives 19 have any connection to the “licensing,” “regulations,” or “reporting requirements” 20 that are imposed on gun dealers. Rather, Section 26806 is best described as “a ruse 21 for a general rummaging in order to discover incriminating evidence” of crimes by 22 dealers’ customers. Florida v. Wells, 495 U.S. 1, 4 (1990).

23 Second, insisting that “firearms dealers are a closely regulated industry” 24 pursuant to “[b]inding precedent,” Defendants recount the litany of licensing and 25 regulatory requirements placed on gun dealers, including “warrantless ...
 26 inspections from federal and state authorities” to ensure compliance with regulatory 27 schemes. Opp. 17-18. But as Plaintiffs have explained, that finding that gun 28 dealers have been “highly regulated” is now suspect after Bruen (which requires

1 firearms regulation to be deeply rooted in history), particularly since “[f]ederal 2 regulation of the interstate traffic in firearms is not as deeply rooted in history. . . .”
 3 United States v. Biswell, 406 U.S. 311, 315 (1972). At a minimum, after Bruen, 4 there is no reason for this Court to expand the doctrine to cover Section 26806’s 5 Orwellian general searches for criminal evidence unconnected to compliance with 6 any regulatory scheme.

7 Third, apparently not understanding that the Supreme Court’s 2012 8 revitalization of the Fourth Amendment’s baseline protection of private property 9 rights provides an independent basis for relief, Defendants demur only that United 10 States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400 (2012) (GPS tracking device placed on a vehicle 11 parked in public), and Florida v. Jardines, 569 U.S. 1 (2013) (drug dog sniff of a 12 home’s front porch), “occurred outside the context of a highly regulated industry 13 and, thus, are inapposite.” Opp. 18. On the contrary, Jones (cited in Bruen) and 14 Jardines establish a broad principle of constitutional law that applies to all Fourth 15 Amendment claims,²² just as Bruen establishes a broad framework that applies in 16 all challenges under the Second Amendment.²³ What is more, Jardines seems 17 directly on point here, having rejected the notion that, without a warrant, the 18 government can have its dog enter a home’s porch to sniff for drugs. 569 U.S. at 19 11. Here, Section 26806 permits the government to digitally enter the home and 20 install pervasive audiovisual surveillance recording equipment. In other words, a 21 far more intrusive search in a far more sensitive place. See Lange v. California, 22 141 S. Ct. 2011 (2021) (applying Jones to reject California’s warrantless entry into 23 a home, explaining “the sanctity of a person’s living space” is “‘first among 26 Jardines] discuss and clarify the Fourth Amendment analysis the Court is to employ when analyzing the constitutionality of a search conducted by law enforcement.”).

27 ²³ Ironically, this is the same flawed argument that Defendants make about 28 the Second Amendment – arguing that, because Section 26806 is merely a “condition or qualification on the commercial sale of arms,” Bruen does not apply.
See Opp. 9.

1 equals,” and where the Fourth Amendment “‘draw[s] a firm line’”); see also 2 Caniglia v. Strom, 141 S. Ct. 1596 (2021) (declining to “‘expand the scope of ...
 3 exceptions to the warrant requirement to permit warrantless entry into the home” 4 to seize firearms pursuant to a “welfare check”). It is hard to see how Fourth 5 Amendment property rights do not prevent California’s prying eyes being mounted 6 on the wall of a marital bedroom that also happens to contain a display case holding 7 firearms. Finally, Defendants’ repeated appeal to the “highly regulated industry” 8 exception falls flat, because that doctrine applies in the context of judicially-created 9 notions of privacy – not to foundational property rights revitalized in Jones.
 10 Defendants offer no case that applies that doctrine to permit what would otherwise 11 be a blatant violation of private property rights. See Gem Fin. Serv., Inc. v. City of 12 New York, 2023 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131092 (E.D.N.Y. July 28, 2023) at *19-20, 24 13 (citing Jardines, and rejecting the notion that “‘obtain[ing] information by 14 physically intruding on’ a business’s ‘papers’” is “immune from Fourth 15 Amendment scrutiny” simply because they are “records that a business is required 16 to maintain” and thus “a closely regulated industry”).

17 Fourth, Defendants deny “that section 26806 is a general warrant, giving 18 government officials limitless access to dealers’ homes and businesses. . . .” Opp.
 19 19. In response, Defendants demur first that “section 26806 requires monitoring 20 only in limited, public spaces,” which Defendants define as all “publicly 21 accessible areas of firearm dealers’ business premises,” including the private homes 22 of home-based dealers.²⁴ Id. at 1, 19 (emphasis added). Second, Defendants claim 23 that Section 26806 “forbids disclosure of the recordings subject to extremely 24 limited exceptions,” which Defendants explain to include broadly any claimed 25 “inspection by the [California DOJ] or licensing authority for which no warrant is 26

27 ²⁴ Compl. ¶¶ 23, 24, 30, 33. Never once in their brief do Defendants deny 28 that Section 26806 requires government surveillance within the private homes of California’s home-based dealers.

1 otherwise required. . . .”²⁵ Id. at 2, 19 (emphasis added). And third, Defendants 2 claim that Section 26806 narrowly “defin[es] the circumstances where recording 3 is required,” which Defendants note is “all entries and exits,” “[a]ll areas where 4 firearms are displayed,” and “[a]ll points of sale,” and all times of the day and night 5 (“continuously 24 hours a day”). Id. at 2, 19. Thus, translating Defendants’ 6 Orwellian newspeak, by “public spaces” Defendants mean “private homes,” by 7 “limited exceptions” Defendants mean “at any time upon demand,” and by 8 “defin[ed] . . . circumstances” and “limited . . . spaces” Defendants mean “all 9 spaces and in all circumstances.” Thus, Defendants’ conclusion that “[n]othing in 10 section 26806 bears resemblance to a general warrant” is correct – if one replaces 11 the word “nothing” with “everything.”

12 C. Section 26806 Violates the Right to Equal Protection.

13 Because Defendants are in violation of Plaintiffs First Amendment rights 14 they are equally violated Plaintiffs Equal Protection rights. U.S. Const. amend.
 15 XIV. Under the Equal Protection Clause, and the First Amendment, a government 16 may not deny or seek to chill the speech and views of some, possibly less favored 17 viewpoints, over the speech and views of others. Police Dep’t of City of 18 Chicago v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 96 (1972). Selective enforcement or exclusions 19 many not be based on reference to content alone. Id. Indeed, the Court held, the 20 government “may not select which issues are worth discussing or debating in public 21 facilities.” Id.

22 If unequal treatment occurs in the context of exercising a fundamental right, 23 or the government is motivated by animus toward a disfavored group, courts apply 24 heightened scrutiny. See generally, Grosjean v. Am. Press Co., 297 U.S. 233 (1936); 25 Minneapolis Star & Trib. Co. v. Minn. Comm’r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575 (1983).
 26 Here, Defendants seek to only regulate, by capturing all speech associated with 27 ²⁵ Indeed, Cal. Penal Code § 26720(a) permits California officials to enter 28 gun dealers’ premises at any time, any number of times, and for any reason, to conduct an inspection of records which now include Section 26806’s recordings.

exercising a fundamental right, those who choose to be part of the “gun culture” in the name of fighting crime. Yet, they do not attempt to stop retail theft in other types of retail establishments where the news reports nightly on gangs of thugs stealing massive amounts of retail merchandise right on camera and costing the state millions lost revenue.²⁶ If cameras under Section 26806 are supposed to deter crime, we certainly do not see it in other non-firearm-related industries. California is arbitrarily subjecting firearm retailers and owners to overbearing restrictions that no other industry is subject to.

D. SECTION 26806 VIOLATES THE CALIFORNIA RIGHT TO PRIVACY

Defendants raise a one-sentence Eleventh Amendment argument related to California’s constitutional right to privacy provision. Opp. 19. At this juncture, Plaintiffs’ cause of action based on California’s constitution is but one of many of Defendants’ violations of law at issue here and, thus, Plaintiffs focus on the federal aspects of their claims, rather than briefing state-law jurisdictional issues that are unnecessary at this time for this Court to grant preliminary relief.

II. PLAINTIFFS ARE SUFFERING IRREPARABLE HARM

In the face of Plaintiffs’ clear demonstration irreparable constitutional harms, Defendants make the dubious claim that Plaintiffs “present no evidence demonstrating any such harm” and that a delay in seeking relief is dispositive. Opp. 21. But “a deprivation of constitutional rights, ‘for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.’” Latta v. Otter, 771 F.3d 496, 500 (9th Cir. 2014) (citation omitted). See also ECF #5-1 (Plaintiffs citing Ninth Circuit cases that state constitutional violations require “immediate injunctive relief,” and that Plaintiffs need not even make a particularly strong showing of 1 harm in constitutional rights cases). Defendants choose not to engage with these 2 authorities.

3 Moreover, courts in this Circuit may not “deny a motion for a preliminary 4 injunction without analyzing the plaintiff’s likelihood of success” when “a plaintiff 5 alleges a constitutional violation.” Baird v. Bonta, 2023 U.S. App. LEXIS 23760, 6 at *6-8 (9th Cir. Sept. 7, 2013); see also 11A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller 7 & Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2948.1 (2d ed. 1995)) (“When 8 an alleged deprivation of a constitutional right is involved, most courts hold that no 9 further showing of irreparable injury is necessary.”).

10 Finally, as to Defendants’ “delay” red herring, the Ninth Circuit is 11 abundantly clear that any delay in seeking injunctive relief almost never precludes a 12 finding of irreparable harm. Rather, “courts are ‘loath to withhold relief solely on 13 that ground.’” Arc of Cal. v. Douglas, 757 F.3d 975, 990 (9th Cir. 2014). As the 14 Ninth Circuit explains, the purported delay is “but a single factor to consider in 15 evaluating irreparable injury. . . .” Id. But even if Defendants were correct that 16 Plaintiffs’ showing of irreparable harm somehow was weakened by their seeking 17 relief when they did, courts in this Circuit “apply a sliding scale test, in which the 18 elements of the Winter test are balanced ‘so that a stronger showing of one element 19 may offset a weaker showing of another.’” Kingdom Muzic, 2022 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20 213213, at *4 (C.D. Ca. Oct. 3, 2022). Simply, Plaintiffs have shown – 21 overwhelmingly – that Section 26806 is blatantly unconstitutional and violative of 22 numerous constitutional rights. The irreparable harm is clear.

23 Nor have Plaintiffs unreasonably delayed in bringing this case. First, no gun 24 store could be expected to invest the thousands of dollars necessary to comply with 25 Section 26806, over a year before actually being required to do so. Second, no 26 small business could reasonably be expected to hire attorneys to bring suit against a 27 law with a far future effective date, when such law may be (i) repealed by the 28 legislature, (ii) overturned by a court in a case brought by another party, or (iii)

1 narrowed in its scope through regulation. Third, as explained in the declarations of 2 the organizational Plaintiffs, they respond (including through litigation) to concerns 3 raised by their members and supporters, concerns that almost invariably increase in 4 tempo and volume as impending effective dates of new laws draw near. See also 5 Compl. ¶¶ 29-33. Section 26806 is not the only anti-gun legislation that California 6 has enacted recently, and these same plaintiffs are currently embroiled in other 7 litigation with these same defendants involving other blatant Second Amendment 8 violations by the State. May, et al. v. Bonta, et al., No. 8:23-cv-01696 (C.D. Cal.
 9 September 12, 2023) (preliminary injunction issued Dec. 20, 2023); Junior Sports
 10 Magazines, Inc., et al. v. Bonta, et al., 2:22-cv-04663-CAS (C.D. Cal. July 8, 2022) 11 (now on appeal by the state); California Rifle & Pistol Ass’n, Incorporated, et al. v.
 12 Los Angeles County Sheriff’s Department, et al., No. 2:23-cv-10169 (C.D. Cal.
 13 December 4, 2023). Defendants claim that because there was swift action in some 14 cases, there somehow must be swift action in all cases.²⁷ There is only so much 15 tyranny that Plaintiffs can challenge at one time. For these reasons, Plaintiffs have 16 not delayed in filing this case.

17 III. THE EQUITIES FAVOR PLAINTIFFS

18 Claiming that Plaintiffs’ irreparable harm is outweighed by California’s, 19 Defendants claim that “enjoining the law would itself be a form of irreparable harm 20 to California and its citizens” because it would “interfere with the public safety 21 goals” and the State would “lose the benefits that section 26806’s enhanced security 22 measures provide.” Opp. 22. On the contrary, there is no legitimate government 23 interest in violating enumerated rights, and neither the State nor its residents are 24 harmed by constitutional fidelity. Preminger v. Principi, 422 F.3d 815, 826 (9th

 26 ²⁷ May, et al. v. Bonta, et al., No. 8:23-cv-01696 (C.D. Cal. September 12, 27 2023) (preliminary injunction issued Dec. 20, 2023) was passed in September 2023 28 with implementation January 1, 2024, less than three months later and Junior Sports Magazines, Inc., et al. v. Bonta, et al., 2:22-cv-04663-CAS (C.D. Cal. July 8, 2022) was passed under an urgency ordinance where the law was effective immediately so Plaintiffs had no choice but to act immediately.

1 Cir. 2005).

2 IV. CONCLUSION

3 For the reasons stated above, and in their pleadings, Plaintiffs request that the 4 Court issue a preliminary injunction enjoining operation and enforcement of 5 Section 26806.
